July 15, 2020

These are emotional times

Waves of pain-filled anger are flooding across our communities regarding historical racist practices and continued injustices. Many communities, including members of Blacotthe voicing of these grievances and actively particip ring the practice of inclusivity, equity, and justice for all.

education encouraging people to recognize that cultural changes are needed for society and institutions to correct the past wrongs facing those experiencing silencing, discrimination, or prejudices. In doing so, -led innovations.

Our MAKERS Series highlights what women of diverse experiences and backgrounds including those of underserved and socially marginalized groups have contributed to our communities and gives voice to those who have long-needed to be recognized.

Our National Education for Women Leadership (NEWL)